New York World. THE PRESIDENT DEVENDED.

A Veteran Democrat Expresses Some new and Interesting Views. To the Editor of the World:

That is more in passionless shadow of my library I have my line. watched with interest the course of the criticism passed upon him from the leaders of the Democratic party have been altogether too severe. I must say at times the World has shocked some of my old-fashioned party notions by the freedom of its criticism, but I believe you to be fair and that you will lieve you to be fair and that you will not be disinclined to permit me to come in my feeble way to the defense of the President from the hands of his former friends.

At the outset I am willing to confess that the President has not been all that my fancy thought he would be, and that in a measure I am somewhat disapsurroundings.

In the first place ne man who ever entered the office of President came to the performance of its duties with such a profound ignorance of what was required of him. Mr. Cleveland has ness in its neighborhood. As I said bea profound ignorance of what was re-quired of him. Mr. Cleveland has never had any national office. He had

Taking him as he really was, you find him a provincial country lawyer, whose only escape from the narrowness of only escape from the narrowness of his Buffalo existence was found in the smaller town of Albany, but in the larger office of Governor. It is hard for any one who has not lived in Washington to understand how difficult it is for a President to gain accurate knowledge. a President to gain accurate knowledge of current affairs. He is surrounded by a crowd of subservient flatters, who tell him nothing but pleasant things. The truth, if disagreeable, rarely reaches him. Unless a President has had rare experience, or is especially skillful in judgment of men, he is certainly to be misguided and misled, no matter how honest he may be.

From whom could Mr. Cleveland expect accurate information and loyal, friendly judgment? To whom in his Cabinet could be have gone if he had so

In the first place Mr. Bayard is absorbed in himself, and has a very poor opinion of the President. He has frequently spoken of him in private in-tercourse with his friends as "This man." Mr. Bayard was bitterly disappointed at his failure to be nominated at Chicago, and can look with Indiffer-ence upon any mistake of the President that will help illustrate the awful and almost tragical blunder of the party's part.

Mesers, Manning and Whitney came into the Cabinet as fresh to the administration of public affairs as the President. They may have been more apt in some ways as students, but they have thus far had more than enough to do to attend to their own affairs. Neither have I ever heard that they were very passionately devoted to the President's interests. I do not think I err now in saying that Mr. Manning is considered as a candidate for the nomination in 1888 by many Democratic politicians, who believe that he will use what credit the Administration has gained as his just due, while the blunders are all to be put upon the broad shoulders of Mr. Cleveland.

We washed our hands on door-knob soap, wiped them on a slippery elm court plaster that had made quite a

Mr. Whitney is the most serene and cynically indifferent of all the Cabinet embers. It would be hard to imagine him interested in any one's political fortunes save his own, and it may nat-urally occur to him that the blunders of his chief and his political wear and tear may be the very thing to give the young, rich protege in the Navy Department his opportunity in 1888.

It is useless to refer to Endicott or Garland. Both of them are as negative as the dead, who speak not. Lamar is a dreamer, a statesman, if you please, when the lamar is the leaves of the lamar is a dreamer, a statesman, if you please, when lamar is the leaves of the lamar is the lamar at the first grade, but not unselfish, afraid of losing his place, and harnessed to the desk where dull business plodding is requisite, his usefulness is as much impaired as would be a thoroughbred horse tackled to a subsoil plough. Vilus is another political tyro who owes his transplanting from obscurity to the fact of his having a rich, rotund voice and impressive air. He captured the fancy of Cleveland.

Here, then, you have two trained statesmen in the Cabinet; one a jealous egotist, who has made more blunders than any tyro could have done in pub-lic affairs, search where you will, and the other a statesman made useless by being misplaced. Two others who, in a confiding sense, are indifferent, and three negatives who are held up by their positions only.

Cleveland is honest and well-meaning. He found out his Cabinet long ago. It is no more to him than any group of Department clerks, so far as it affects his personal action; but he has not the political knowledge or sagacity which would enable him to form a new

The President was further fettered by his relations with the mugwumps. He regards them as necessary to his future. He must please them, for the Democrats, he holds, will have to support him in any event.

A pale chambermaid, wearing a black jersey with large pores in it through which she is percolating, now goes joyously up the stairs to make the little post office lock-box rooms look ten times worse than they ever did before. She warbles a low refrain as she nimbly knocks loose the yenerable dust of see. knocks loose the venerable dust of cer turies and sets it affoat throughout the 1887. Harper's Young People. AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

Harper's Young People has been called "the model of what a periodical for young readers ought to be," and the justice of this commendation is amply sustained by the large circulation it has attained both at home and in Great Britain. This success has been reached by methods that must commend themselves to the judgment of parents, no less than to the tastes of children—namely, by an earnest and well sustained effort to provide the best and most attractive reading for young people atta low price. The illustrations are copious and of a conspicuously high standard of excellence.

An epitome of everything that is attractive and de-drable in juvenile literature.—Boston Courier. A Weekly feast of good things to the boys and girls in every family which it visits.—Brooklyn Union. It is wonderful in its wealth of pictures, information, and interest.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.
